ROBERT GOTTLIEBSEN

Robert Gottliebse has spent nearly 40 years writing and commentating about business and investment in Australia. He has won the Walkley award and Australian Journalist of the Year Award, two of journalism's highest honours.

In 1974 Gottliebse started the Chanticleer column in the Australian Financial Review, which is still running more than a quarter of a century later. In 1980 he handed the Chanticleer column onto a number of successors; journalists that he had helped train.

In 1981 Gottliebse founded BRW magazine and helped build the weekly business magazine readership to the highest in the world on a per capita basis.

In 1983 he started the top selling Personal Investor Magazine and in 1998 Shares Magazine. Gottliebse appears regularly on television and has been a significant contributor to the Internet.

In 1999 he became host of the Business Daily TV show on Sky News. In 2000 he moved his Business Daily TV studio to "The Australian" Newspaper where he was appointed National Business Commentator.

Until 2006 Gottliebse had a unique role in Australian journalism, communicating business ideas and comments through, "The Australian", TV shows, the Internet and regular radiobroadcasts. Robert continues to write in "The Australian", and to speak to organisations, whilst also pursuing a "sea-change".
